Description of the Work:

Red Chair

I wanted to explore the idea of an item found in a common setting but could be thrown into an unnatural environment. Through this painting I explored the notion of the figure being front and center but also surrounded by nature. The colors meshing in unison and working together with naturalistic colors but unrealistic colors as well. The figure in this painting is a close friend and I also wanted to show him in a graceful but calming stance. His arm has a rocket tattoo and I tied this into the background with the water tower's writing exclaiming "To the Stars 1997", 1997 being his birth year.

Karvarus

The reference photo used was taken during a FaceTime call. This painting shows the dynamic of a long-distance relationship and the ways of communication needed in the absence of physical space. The colors and use of medium portray a bright and restful moment. I also incorporated the duality of nature with the figures of plants in the fore ground and background.

Younger Self

My younger self is portrayed with a slight scowl. The figure almost separated by the earthy tones in the surroundings creating stark contrast. This brings me back to my childhood and when I would spend countless hours outdoors. Inspiration through nature threw me into creativity at a young age which in turn allowed me to follow more creative pursuits.
